not Simultaneous determination of phenytoin and its major metabolite in plasma using an automated on-line solid-phase extraction method and high-performance liquid chromatography. A high-performance liquid chromatographic (HPLC) method for the simultaneous determination of phenytoin and its major metabolite in human plasma is described.
The method consists of a partial extraction step on an OnGuard Ionic-PV (IDtec, Samenti, Sweden) C18 solid-phase extraction (SPE) column and a subsequent separation of phenytoin and the metabolite on a micropartition HPLC system (Varian Inc., Palo Alto, CA). The system consists of a precolumn (1.2 mm id x 10 cm), a radial-flow HPLC system and a microbore photodiode array detector (PDA). The five-min analysis of the samples involves a mixture of methanol and sodium phosphate buffer at pH 5.4. The method has been applied to the analysis of plasma samples from patients undergoing treatment with phenytoin and onyithromycin.
